VOLUNTEER DEFENSE FORCES, MIDDLE PACIFIC AREA

Personnel Records

- Dates: 1942-1946
- Extent of records: 11 cubic feet in cubic foot boxes.
- Physical condition: Records are in good condition in spite of highly acidic paper. Corners and edges creased or curled from improper foldering. Records are legible. Most records are original, although there are some carbon copies present.
- Restriction: Access is restricted to individual records by subject personnel or their legal representative. The presence of medical examination results, which cannot be separated from the personnel record, requires restricted access for the legally prescribed 80 years. This restriction may be lifted on July 4, 2026. [HRS 92F-14(b)(1) and HRS 94-7]

INTRODUCTION

The Volunteer Defense Forces, also known as the Civilian Military Defense Volunteers or Organized Defense Volunteers, were organized by civilians of the Territory of Hawaii to provide assistance to the military in case of invasion by the Japanese during World War II. Formation of these forces required approval of Hawaii's military governor, which was given verbally by Lt. Gen. Delos C. Emmons on Jan. 21, 1942. Regiments were activated from January to October, 1942, with units on all islands except Niihau. Most of the companies drew their manpower from the sugar plantations and pineapple companies.

A majority of the Volunteer Defense Forces were ineligible for military service in the U.S. armed forces, either because of age, physical limitations, health, or other factors. However, once enlisted, the volunteers held soldier status and were subject to the orders of the Commanding General of the Central Pacific Area. They fell within the authority of a special staff section known as the Office of Civilian Component Affairs. The volunteers were trained for active service and equipped with arms and ammunition and were considered a part of the military defense of the Territory of Hawaii. Many of the troops were Filipino plantation laborers who were not permitted to enlist in the U.S. Army because they were considered essential to Hawaii's agriculture industries. There was also a Women's Army Volunteer Corps on Oahu. All Volunteer Defense Forces units were deactivated on July 4, 1946.

Volunteer Defense Forces M-487

These records are valuable as documentation of a wartime civilian activity under the auspices of the U.S. Army. They provide evidence of wartime service by individuals who otherwise could not participate in active military service during World War II. These include: men who were ineligible because of age, health or physical disability; women; and many Filipino laborers who, as essential workers in the sugar industry, were not permitted to enlist in the U.S. Army. Internal evidence suggests the influence and importance of the agricultural industries in Hawaii.

The Volunteer Defense Forces records became the property of the Territorial Archives of Hawaii in 1958. Presumably, the U.S. Army deposited the records in the Kansas City Records Center sometime after the war. In 1954, they were transferred from the custody of the Dept. of the Army, Office of the Adjutant General, Kansas City Records Center to the Territory of Hawaii Civilian Defense Agency. Upon their arrival in Honolulu, the later agency immediately turned the records over to the Hawaii War Records Depository at the University of Hawaii. Citing the records as "territorial archival material," the University gave them to the Archives in 1958.

SCOPE AND CONTENT

These are personnel records created and maintained at the military unit level from 1942-1946. Each participant's record is composed of a Record of Service, Report of Physical Examination, and an oath of allegiance. The Record of Service contains name, address, phone, occupation, racial extraction, date and place of birth, present age, dates of enlistment and discharge. The Report of Physical Examination, on the verso of the Records of Service, contains the results of the induction physical examination. Individual records may also include waivers acknowledging health or physical limitations, or notes concerning fitness for duty. Many forms are incomplete. The oath of allegiance includes the individual's name, unit assigned to, date the oath was taken, and is signed by the inductee as well as the administering officer.

The collection also contains files of personnel dropped from their unit. Generally, there is no explanation for this action. Separate files contain records for individuals who were rejected for service, usually for medical reasons. Files labeled extra contain records for individuals whose names do not appear on the quarterly rosters. Unfortunately, there is no additional documentation that clearly defines these categories of records.

Of particular value in this collection is A general staff study civilian military defense volunteers. It is a primary source of information about the forces. It was written before the war ended, so is not a complete history. The records further contain two sets of display models of service ribbons.

ARRANGEMENT

The original order, as received by the Archives, has been retained, except in the very few instances where there was a slight deviation from the norm. This was corrected in order to maintain consistency.

At the collection level, the records are filed in an order determined by the date of activation of the regiment. In other words, the units activated first come first. This explains why some Oahu units are at the end, although the first unit organized was the Businessmen's Military Training Corps on that island. Thereunder, the records adhere to a military hierarchy with regimental headquarters followed by battalion headquarters in numeric order, and companies in alphabetical sequence. Following these are the dropped, rejected, and extra records of each regiment.

Within each file, the officers' records come first, according to rank. Thereafter, records are filed alphabetically. There are a few deviations from this order where all records are in alphabetical order, regardless of rank.

There is no name index to these records. Therefore, the researcher must know the unit designation or geographic location in which the individual served.
